An extinct language is a language that no longer has any speakers, especially if the language has no living descendants. In contrast, a dead language is "one that is no longer the native language of any community", even if it is still in use, like Latin. Languages that currently have living native speakers are sometimes called modern languages to contrast them with dead languages, especially ...In ecology, extinction is often used informally to refer to local extinction, in which a species ceases to exist in the chosen area of study, but may still exist elsewhere. This phenomenon is also known as extirpation. Local extinctions may be followed by a replacement of the species taken from other locations; wolf reintroduction is an example of this. Will public libraries become extinct? This question was originally answered on Quora by Erica Friedman and Marc Bodnick. [quote] But what he doesn't say is that black people too will "become extinct" when that happens. Because a lot of people's social/cultural definitions of race are based on the "one drop" rule which qualifies various racial mixes, appearances, etc. as "black." - How To Become Extinct
